The objective of this study was to develop a Bayesian hierarchical model to address pemetrexed's potential to increase toxicity in placebo patients in combined chemo-immunotherapy phase II trials. We proposed a multi-site design with early stopping for safety using an approximate Bayesian posterior predictive model to evaluate potential benefit of pemetrexed in combination. We compared an alternative design that implements a fixed sample size across sites versus the new approach with simultaneous sample size estimation across sites and a Bayesian approach to the analysis. We simulated three chemo-immunotherapy trial scenarios, each containing three sites, enrolling multiple cohorts of subjects with varying differences in 09e8f5149f
